UN Calls on Cambodian Government to Strengthen Protections Against Sexual Violence

Phnom Penh, Tuesday, 16 June 2026

For the first time, the UN Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW Committee) has issued a decision in an individual case concerning sexual violence in Cambodia, finding that the Cambodian government violated the rights of a young Cambodian girl who was repeatedly raped by a police officer. The Committee found that the Cambodian government failed to ensure justice, protection, and effective remedies, and instead perpetuated impunity and discrimination which “exposed her to ongoing harassment and intimidation, causing irreparable psychological harm and revictimizing her”.

We welcome the landmark views adopted by the Committee and call on the government to immediately increase efforts to prevent gender-based violence and ensure that every victim/survivor has access to fair and timely justice that is free from discrimination.

As a party to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women, Cambodia recognises the CEDAW Committee’s competence in receiving and considering complaints about individual cases that happen in Cambodia.

The case submitted to the Committee concerns a police officer who repeatedly raped an 11-year-old girl with a disability in 2010. Despite eventual conviction by the Supreme Court in 2016, the perpetrator has not served the prison sentence or paid the civil compensation owed. The Committee found that the legal process was marked by extensive delays, inadequate sentencing, and a failure to enforce the final judgment. The girl and her family have now been waiting for justice for 16 years while the perpetrator remains at large.

The CEDAW Committee concluded that Cambodia violated its obligations by failing to provide effective protection and remedy, perpetuating impunity and discrimination. This included:

- Failing to ensure a prompt, independent, impartial, and thorough investigation
- Applying discriminatory stereotypes related to gender, age, and disability
- Applying stereotypical understandings of sexual violence and unreasonable evidentiary standards
- Imposing an inadequate sentence that did not reflect the severity of the violation
- Failing to enforce the final judgment, including arrest and payment of compensation
- Failing to implement protections throughout the legal process, resulting in deprivation of her right to liberty, freedom of movement, and association

The Committee identified that these were “tantamount to a failure of justice” and “a denial of effective justice”. These views, adopted on 20 February 2026, reflect the systemic barriers to justice and safety faced by victims/survivors of gender-based violence and people with disabilities in Cambodia.

We now urge the Cambodian government to take immediate and concrete action to implement the Committee’s recommendations. Among others, these recommendations include:

- Immediately enforcing the Supreme Court judgment, including the arrest and detention of the perpetrator and full payment of civil compensation
- Providing the girl and her family with reparative justice, restitution for financial damages, psychological support, and measures to restore dignity and community inclusion
- Revising the legal framework to ensure it reflects international standards regarding consent, strictly enforcing prescribed penalties, and ending unfair evidentiary standards
- Prohibiting the use of non-judicial resolutions – including reconciliation, mediation, and other alternative dispute resolution mechanisms – in sexual violence cases
- Ensuring effective, gender-sensitive, victim/survivor-centred, trauma-informed, child-friendly, and non-discriminatory access to justice in all sexual violence cases

The Committee requested Cambodia provide information regarding the complaint on three occasions prior to issuing these views. Cambodia failed to engage with the Committee or provide any information or observations. Cambodia now has six months to provide a written response to the Committee, including information on any action taken in the light of the views and recommendations. The Committee also requested that Cambodia translate its findings to Khmer and disseminate them widely. We will continue to monitor the government's implementation of these recommendations in the coming months.

The case marks the first views concerning sexual violence in Cambodia issued under the Optional Protocol to the CEDAW Convention. Cambodia now has an opportunity to clearly demonstrate that sexual violence and discrimination are intolerable acts that it is urgently working to end. We urge the Cambodian government to implement the recommendations, publicly report on its progress, and ensure effective justice for every Cambodian who has experienced sexual violence.
